Mining from Chemical Graphs

Takashi Okada

This chapter intends to give a overview of the developments in chemical structure mining. The viewpoint is somewhere between a computer scientist and a chemist, reflecting the author's standpoint. After a brief overview of chemical structure representation, we discuss the issues of mining, and describe the developments in this field. Those who wish to know more about chemical information should consult a textbook of chemoinformatics will be a good source.