

Scale-free networks and network mining problems

Hiroyoshi Miwa, Naoki Masuda, Noriko Konno

It is well known that many real networks have power-law vertex degree distribution, short average path length, and high clustering. On such a network, efficient algorithms to solve some problems on mining information are required. We briefly review these topics and introduce our random graph models which generate realistic networks.